VI THE EVOLUTION OF TILES

The technique of shaping clay to form tiles, vessels and ceremonial artifacts is almost as old as civilization itself and almost as soon as societies realized the potential of the material, they also began to decorate some of the objects they made.

Every culture, with the technology and resources available has produced tiles at various levels. From hand dry clay slabs, dried in sun and fired with straw and old car tyres to colossal factories hydraulically dust pressing thousands of tiles per hour around the clock.

The first decorative tile making in Europe began in the Middle ages. The age of Cathedral building brought with it production of magnificent ornamental tiled floors. Numerous palaces and public buildings of the ancient world were adorned with decorative tiles. Architectural Masterpieces like the Blue Mosque and Topkapi Palace in Istanbul, the Royal Palace at Isfahan are some examples.

The Egyptians were probably the first ones to develop glazes. The potters of Islamic world, which included Syria, Egypt, Persia, Mesopotamia and Palestine were responsible for many innovations in tile-making and glazing. Their decorative techniques spread via Moorish Spain to most of Europe.

A very important development was the technique of luster glaze introduced to Persia during the 11th century, probably by potters from Egypt and Mesopotamia. These glazes included particles of gold and silver and were painted on to glazed tiles already fired. These tiles were then fired again at a low temperature to give a sparkling effect.

Another architectural innovation was tile mosaic. This Islamic invention uses fired pieces sawn up into shapes such as squares, triangles, diamonds etc. These small tiles were used to build up interlocking patterns on the interior and exterior walls of palaces and Mosques. Floor mosaics proved durable and practical for surfaces in domestic and public places. Much in the way carpets and tiles are used today.

Beautiful, durable and versatile, tiles have been a popular form of decoration for over 2000 years. Today, mass-produced tiles are widely available, but those made in the traditions of ancient times are the ones that really capture our imagination. No longer consigned to kitchen splashbacks or bathroom walls, ceramic tiles are, today, a modern design feature, adding beauty to surfaces throughout the home or workplaces.
